15. Course aims:

The aim of the “Medieval philosophy” is to present (show) the development of philosophical thought from early neoplatonic authors, through the classic middle age theologians and philosophers up to the renaissance thinkers. On the one hand, the course will investigate the influence of the ancient thought on the Jewish, Christian and Islamic tradition, and on the other hand, it will consider the effects of these three to the formation of later renaissance and modern philosophy. It should enable the students to acquire the basic knowledge of the history of philosophy.

16. Learning outcomes:

The course guides the students to the origins of modern philosophy and scientific thought. The aim of this process is to gain insight in the epochal changes that the ancient and middle age ideas underwent in the renaissance and early modern thoughts. The students will be trained to consider systematic changes which transformed philosophy through the transition from ancient polytheism to monotheism. The students will gain skills to analyze the differences between religious and secular assumptions of philosophic thoughts.
